A Letter From the Executive Director

Dear Friends,

I am overjoyed to announce that in roughly two months I am going to become a mother for the first time. The process of bringing a child into the world has been exhilarating, and if I am being totally honest, quite terrifying, too! Very soon I am going to be responsible for another human life, and with that, I have felt a burning desire in my belly (literally!) for reevaluation. I have found myself asking big, important questions like, “What do I want for my life and what must I do, change or release to get there?”

It’s funny because in the last year, I have been able to draw some striking parallels with my pregnancy journey and the path Erika’s Lighthouse has taken. For Erika’s Lighthouse, the last eighteen months have been all about reevaluation, change and making room for the new. Just as I have been asking big, important questions, so has Erika’s Lighthouse, and our future has never looked so bright.

Last summer, with the help of my staff and board, we set a vision to become a leading provider of teen depression awareness programs and resources in middle school and high school communities. This new and far reaching vision has taken our work into a beautifully inclusive and expansive direction. As we begin to think about being a leading provider, we are now challenging ourselves to ask the kinds of questions that will truly enable us to trailblaze our field. Questions like, “How can we create programs that are engaging, impactful and relevant to students from diverse communities? How can we continue to bring the most cutting edge ideas about depression awareness and mental health into schools while respecting their system, needs and standards? And, how can we continue to provide materials in the most accessible format as possible?”

One of our most promising initiatives of the year has been birthing The Lighthouse Curriculum: Depression and Suicide Awareness for High School Students, which will be launching this fall. This video-based high school classroom curriculum shares a new story of mental health, one that’s inclusive, accessible and empowering. The Lighthouse Curriculum seeks to open up conversations about mental health, provides students with opportunities to better understand what it’s like to have depression, and informs students of where they can get help if worried about themselves or a friend. The program will also teach students research-based methods for reducing stress and practical ideas for supporting well-being. Please take a moment to watch our 90-second trailer and find out more about The Lighthouse Curriculum by visiting www.erikaslighthouse.org/teen-depression-training.

They say, “It takes a village to raise a child.” I guess I will find out very soon whether or not that is true! What I do know is that it takes a village to actualize our shared mission to Get Depression Out of the Dark. You are the reason we can trailblaze, lead and make a difference in our small sector of society - improving the mental health of our teens.

As you flip through the rest of this report, I hope you are proud and inspired. I know I am. We can’t thank you enough for your unwavering love and support. If you would like to find out more about how you can get involved or make a donation, please visit our website at www.erikaslighthouse.org.

With deep gratitude,

Heather Freed, LCSW
Executive Director
I grew up queer, just as I grew up with depression.

Neither are separable from any aspect of my life and as such both experiences can be viewed through linked lenses. This is important to point out mainly because I think that people sometimes don’t quite understand how profoundly mental health and LGBT identities impact the course of, and how one views, their lives in their entireties—and not just the parts most closely affected. I think about it like a nuclear blast, in a sense. There’s the ground zero, and the most affected zones, and then less affected zones, but the radiation still spreads over the entire world.

Knowledge is power. Time stops for no one.

These are pretty descriptive of what’s helped me move forward. The first - knowledge is power. It’s a common phrase for a reason. Before I got involved with Erika’s Lighthouse, I didn’t have the understanding to be able to change my situation. I remember alternately praying that I would wake up and have the right body and praying that I wouldn’t wake up at all. It depended on whether the days felt heavy due to having untreated depression—or if the days were ones pulled down by the intensity of my gender dysphoria; people not seeming to get that I wasn’t a girl. I just didn’t know. And so I spent most of my life just waiting for time to keep pushing forward, as it always does.

What Erika’s Lighthouse gave me was a voice. It gave me a way to fight back against the frustratingly intangible issue that mental health is. It gave me a small sense of community with a peer group during a time that I didn’t have a safe space to retreat to, with school and home and sports all being so deeply entangled with my struggle with my gender or depression. It gave me a positive relationship with multiple fantastic adults in my life, as well as with people who worked in the mental health field.

It also gave me a better lens with which to look at time. Time stops for no one, and just as I had gotten through all the days before, my ability to see the days ahead become better and better until I stopped feeling like I had a cap on my vision. I am not the person that I was when this journey started, but I was given the keys to the ways to keep going. Knowledge is power. Time stops for no one. And life does indeed get better.

Kelly Ph.D., LCSW, of Loyola University School of Social Work determined that our Teen Depression: Stories of Hope & Health middle school curriculum has a statistically significant impact on students’ knowledge of depression, as well as significantly increased the likelihood that students would seek out a trusted adult in times of need.
Why We Ask for Your E-mail

We get it. Everyone gets inundated with e-mails. However, here at Erika’s Lighthouse, we do not send more than one or two emails per month, and the information you’ll receive is similar to the annual report you are reading now. Our goal is to share with you how we’re spending your donations, alert you to events that we’re hosting, and update you on major changes and new initiatives that happen here at Erika’s Lighthouse. We promise we won’t spam your inbox, and everything we send will be quality, relevant and infrequent. Thank you for understanding and adding your e-mail to our list!
